THURSDAY April 27, 1738.

LONDON, December 20.

THE Funeral of her late Majeſty was performed between the Hours of Six and Nine laſt Saturday Night, from the Prince's Chamber to King Henry the Seventh's Chappel, with great Solemnity, Peace and Order: Her Majeſty's Pall was ſupported by ſix Dukes, four of them being Knights of the Garter, and two of them Knights of the Bath, viz. the Duke of Richmond, the Duke of Montagu, the Duke of Argyll, the Duke of ——, the Duke of St. Albans, and the Duke of Mancheſter. The Scaffolding on which the Proceſſion paſs'd was lin'd on each Side with the Foot Guards, bearing Wax Torches in their Hands; the Foot were ſupported by the Horſe Guards, who were poſted on both Sides of the Scaffold in the Street; the Horſe Grenadiers were poſted at all the Avenues leading to the Abbey. The Funeral being much earlier than expected, the Concourſe of People was not near ſo great as was thought, and we do not hear of any Miſchief that happened.

Their Graces the Dukes of Dorſet and Grafton were the Supporters of her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs Amelia.

There were ten Biſhops walk'd in their Robes in the Proceſſion.

At Six o'Clock at Night, when the Proceſſion began, the Tower Guns begun to fire, and continued firing every Minute 'till her Majeſty was interr'd; at the ſame Time St. Paul's Bell began tolling, and ended at Ten.

'This Great QUEEN, always the Object of our Love and Adminiſtration, and at preſent of our inexpreſſible Grief, to a large Compaſs of Knowledge, joined the moſt polite Addreſs, and the moſt eaſy and elegant Manner of producing the Sentiments of others or conveying her own; ſhe not only ſtudied Books, but what was infinitely better, the Nature and Reaſon of Things: She drew her Knowledge out of that Fountain, from whence all real Knowledge in Books was originally drawn; and was as great a Proficient in the Science, or Wiſdom of Life, both private and publick, as ever adorn'd any Age or Country: She could wiſely manage her own Paſſions, and rightly conduct thoſe of others: She was acquainted with all the Avenues of the Mind; and knew perfectly well how to reach the Head, by a proper Application to the Heart. She was, indeed, formed for publick Life; for ſhe underſtood the true Foundations of Religion and Government: She knew, that the true Foundation of Religion was the Will of GOD, ever manifeſt in the Reaſon of Things; and that the true Foundation of Government was Law, made by the Repreſentatives of a Free People. She diſtinguiſhed between real and political Religion; real, or what Dr. Clarke calls ſincere and uncorrupt Religion, had always her ſupreme Regard, and to which every Thing was made to ſubmit: But the political Part of Religion ſhe conſidered only as local, or occaſional, and ſo far ſubmitted or accomodated her Conduct to it, as that Conduct tended more directly to promote the Peace, Order and Happineſs of the Publick.

'Thus was her Majeſty greatly formed by Nature and Study for publick Life. In private Life, ſhe was an illuſtrious Example of all the ſocial Virtues; but, in one Inſtance, commanded the Imitation of every Family in the Kingdom; and that was prudent Family Government. Authority, which is loſt almoſt in every other Houſe, was carefully preſerved in the Royal Palace; where it was rightly judged, that Education, without Government and Reſtraint, as Planting without pruning, and lopping off luxurious Branches, would produce Minds void of Strength and Beauty, and unable to bring forth the Fruits of uſeful and reaſonable Action. The QUEEN knew how abſolutely

'absolutely necessary it was to teach 'Youth, very early, to refuse whatever 'was hurtful or dishonourable; and to 'prefer the constant and durable Good 'before momentary and fleeting Plea-'sures: She knew, that in the Practice 'of this Doctrine of Refusing, lay all 'the Seeds of Virtue, and the Foundation 'of every Thing Great and truly Noble, 'for which Reason she obliged her Chil-'dren to refuse whatever was unreasonably 'desired; and in this has set an Example, 'which, 'tis greatly to be wished, all the 'Families in the Kingdom would think it 'their highest Duty to follow; and not on-'ly in this, but in all her other domestick 'and private Virtue; for she was an excel-'lent Wife, Mother, Friend, Patron, and 'Benefactress; so that her Name and Repu-'tation will be dear to every English Man, 'and had in everlasting Remembrance.'

The ANTHEM performed at the Solemnity of Her MAJESTY's Funeral.
